The National Black Movie Association Founder and President, Agnes Moss, is excited to join the podcast to discuss National Black Movie Day™ on Keeping It Reel. “I’ve followed Tim Gordon for years and have admired his critiques and angles on analyzing films,” says Agnes Moss. “It’s an honor to share the purpose of National Black Movie Day™ with his listeners and to recognize over a century of Black excellence in the film industry. The first National Black Movie Day™ will be observed in Washington, DC with plans to expand to other cities in 2021. “National Black Movie Day™ is about the rich legacy Black Americans have as storytellers. Our stories are much more than entertainment. Movies bring our culture to the big screen where we can celebrate our lives, our experiences and our stories,” says Agnes Moss. The three recipients of National Black Movie Association’s first annual awards are continuing our legacy and are deserving of the support and recognition for their accomplishments in creating, sharing and supporting Black stories.”
